Existing home sales in the US rose by 2.2% in Dec'24 to 4.24mn units (10-month high), even as house prices surged. However, on an annual basis, sales in CY24 were the lowest since CY95. CY25 appears to have started on a bleaker note, with services PMI and consumer sentiment declining. Flash US services PMI eased to 52.8 in Jan'25 (9-month low) from 56.8 in Dec'24. University of Michigan's Jan'25 consumer sentiment also dropped for the 1st time in six months, to 71.1 from 74 in Dec'24, and inflation expectations jumped (3.3% versus 2.8% in Dec'24). In China as well, the year has started on a weak footing with official manufacturing PMI dropping to 49.1 in Jan'25 from 50.1 in Dec'24, led by steep decline in new orders index. Industrial profits in China fell for the 3rd consecutive year in CY24 (-3.3%), following (-) 2.3% decline in CY23. In contrast, India's manufacturing activity remains robust, with flash Markit PMI at 58 in Jan'25, up from 56.4 in Dec'24.

- Except Hong Kong and China, stocks elsewhere ended lower. Investors continued to monitor US policies and macro data. Earnings reports also remain in focus. However, optimism over US-China relations drove stocks in HK and China higher. Sensex ended in red, as real estate and oil and gas stocks slid. It is trading further lower today, in line with other Asian stocks.

- Except JPY, other global currencies ended stronger. DXY fell by 0.6% led by weak macro data (services PMI and consumer sentiment index). GBP and EUR gained as flash PMIs signalled an improvement. INR appreciated tracking lower oil prices. However, it is trading weaker today, in line with its Asian peers.
